SEATTLE, April 15, 2010 -- Monarch Contemporary is pleased to announce an exhibition of mixed media works on paper by Seattle artist Erin Morrison.

Working with mixed wet + dry media on paper, Morrison's work depicts the adaptation of landscape to man's rising standards of modification in the struggle to remain productive.

In this body of work, she addresses a diverse range of urban ecosystems (namely the industrial landscape) attempting to give the viewer a new relation to presence, established through the methodical act of drawing. By exercising the emotions that circulate death, development, and rebirth, Morrison finds a new perspective within her process, the sensation of spectacle through the documentation of natural catastrophes:

"The act of detroying even the most hardened and indifferent stuctures demands a response, even if the event has never taken place." –Erin Morrison
